

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Lime.

A writer in the Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society, describing the permanence of the action of lime, says that he knows a piece of ground containing 166 acres, which formerly grew nothing but hemp. A good dressing of lime was applied on the surface of the land which has nearly doubled its value. This was done several years ago, and totally eradicated the hemp. The lime to this day appears in full condition, as its effects usually testify from the richness and sweetness of the herbage, the texture of which has been entirely changed.

Our friends Pattle & Shook, at Cowan are prepared to furnish our farmers with any quantity of lime at reasonable rates.

Every Farmer Should Have a Trade Mark.

Indeed, every farmer's name and address in full should go on to every barrel of apples, potatoes, sack of grain, tub of butter, box of cheese and basket of berries he ships to market. His name should be his trade mark, and the aim should always be to make it mean to the buyer who sees it on the package that the contents of this package are the best of the kind in market; the trademark of a good name is difficult to get in my market, but as Dr. Hexamer said recently, "it is still harder to keep." It requires untiring vigilance and unswerving rule and decision in one's relations to his employees on the farm—but such a name is worth striving to gain and struggling to keep.

How to get Rich and to Make your Farm Rich.

Some of our correspondents say: Give us something practical on the management, feeding and fattening of hogs, cattle, sheep etc."

We propose in this article, to tell you how a poorman, on a poor farm got rich himself, and, in the meantime, made his poor farm rich; and how the same thing can be done in almost any given locality.

Our neighbor, N., in Kentucky, owned a farm of 150 or 200 acres, in cultivation. It was situated on the divide, between what was called the rich blue grass and the poor oak lands, considerably broken and comparatively poor. He raised a sufficiency of all kinds of stock, grain and grasses for home uses. His specialties, however, were tobacco and hogs. The variety of tobacco grown by our neighbor, was a cinnamon-colored wrapped leaf, distinguished for its size and the fineness of its stem and fibre. It was mostly used for making "fine cut," and was then and still is known the world over, as "Mason County Tobacco." The extraordinary care with which he managed and "handled" his crop of tobacco, made him famous as a tobacco grower, and he could always sell for a cent more per pound than his neighbors. But we do not propose to tell you about his tobacco growing, but about his system of hog feeding and rotting. He generally sold from one to two hundred of the fattest hogs in the county, each fall, and at the highest figures. He always had a field of clover, on which he grazed his hogs through the summer, and which we will for convenience, call No. 1. No. 2 is a field of rye. When the rye became thoroughly ripe and straw fallen, he would take his hogs from the clover and turn them into the rye field. No. 3 is a field of corn intended to be fed down to his hogs. By the time the corn was sufficiently matured for feeding purposes, the rye was pretty well used up, and the hogs already fat enough for market.

In this condition they are removed to the cornfield to take on what Missions call "hog fat," and they did it effectually. A little before they finished the cornfield he would sow it down in rye, at the rate of a bushel and a half of seed to the acre. The rootings of the hogs and the rains were all that was needed to cover the seed sufficiently, and the hogs were removed and sold before any serious damage was done to the young rye. This was intended for No. 2 of the following year. Thus it was that Mr. N.—raised better hogs and sold them for a better price than any man in his section, and thus he gradually grew rich.

But now about making his poor farm rich. Let us look again at the rye field, No. 2, fed down to the hogs. That was No. 3 last year, and had on it before being sown in rye a heavy coat of corn stalks all trampled down and tangled by the hogs, so that it would rot easily. And all the droppings of 150 hogs had fed upon it—and which is said to be the very best animal manure.

In addition to this, it has the straw of the heavy crop of rye, in the best possible condition for rotting, together with the super-added droppings of another large herd of hogs. In the meantime, the rye left upon the ground has sprung up, and furnish a magnificent winter pasture for his calves, colts and other loose stock, which is of great value. In the spring, which in good season, this was all turned under, and the field, which we call No. 4, planted in corn for his crib next winter. In this way our friend rotated from field
